Image copyright Getty Images Image caption Obama's Lighthouse Project will help save a billion barrels of oil President Barack Obama has unveiled his ambitious plan to make the US a clean energy superpower. He outlined the plan with a mix of pledges and the spread of schemes that will save the country billions of dollars. The initiatives cover everything from speeding up the closure of coal plants and improving the efficiency of cars to creating new jobs. They will all cost money and will not be carried out unless Congress votes for them. "If we act," the president told a group of about 100 manufacturing and energy business executives at the White House, "we can unleash the genius of this country again and unleash the American economy once more."
